A supercomputer is an extremely powerful computer that is designed to perform complex calculations and simulations at incredibly high speeds. These machines are typically used for scientific and engineering applications that require massive amounts of processing power.